Apply Now!

The Nezu Stress and Coping Research Lab in Drexel University's Psychology Department is currently looking for motivated, responsible undergraduates who are interested in obtaining research experience as a member of our team!

Much of our lab's research involves testing both the efficacy of Problem-Solving Therapy, an evidence-based cognitive-behavioral intervention, as well as its underlying conceptual basis, in two major applied areas:

1. Clinical health psychology (e.g., treatment of patients with a variety of medical diagnoses such as chronic pelvic pain, asthma)
2. Stress-related problems experienced by Veterans (e.g., suicide, depression, housing instability, and post-deployment challenges)

This experience is especially relevant for students wishing to apply to graduate school in psychology in the future. Accepted applicants will be afforded the opportunity to participate in diverse research-related activities, including:

- Recruitment of research participants (medical patients, Veterans, and undergraduates) from various settings across the Philadelphia area
- Conducting research assessments with participants
- Training in suicide risk assessment and Problem-Solving Therapy
- Administrative tasks (e.g., returning participant phone calls, data entry/scoring, material preparation, etc.)
- Opportunities to conduct original research as part of an undergraduate thesis project and be included as authors on various professional presentations

We seek a minimum commitment of 8-10 hours per week, which includes lab meetings every Wednesday from 4:30-6:30pm. You must also be able and willing to commit to a minimum of four academic terms. To apply, please e-mail Meghan Colosimo (Clinical Psychology Ph.D. student) at mmc366@drexel.edu with the following information:

1. A brief statement of interest or cover letter explaining how the Nezu Stress and Coping Research Lab fits with your research interests and educational/professional goals
